Caregiver Resources in Arizona

WHAT IS A CAREGIVER?

A caregiver is someone who provides care for another person. This includes doing tasks such as driving someone to a doctor's appointment, preparing meals, and reminding them to take their medication. It also includes hands-on tasks like getting someone out of bed, bathing them, and helping them get dressed.

The AARP has estimated that there are 53 million adult caregivers in the US. This means informal, unpaid caregivers, such as family members and friends. It also includes paid professionals.

WHO NEEDS CARE?

People who aren't able to do activities of daily living (ADLs) need someone to help them. There are two kinds of ADLs. Basic ADLs focus on taking care of yourself. Instrumental ADLs are about managing life. The fewer tasks a person can do on their own, the more help they need.

- Basic ADLs:
  - Walking or transferring to a wheelchair
  - Feeding yourself
  - Dressing yourself
  - Personal hygiene, such as bathing, and caring for teeth and hair
  - Getting to the toilet, using it appropriately, and cleaning yourself

- Instrumental ADLs:
  - Transportation, either driving or organizing other ways of getting places
  - Paying bills and managing finances
  - Shopping for groceries and other items, and preparing meals
  - Housework to keep areas clean and tidy
  - Communication with others, including using the telephone and mail
  - Medications, taking over-the-counter and prescription drugs as the doctor instructs

If you are taking care of someone on a 24-hour basis, it's important to take a break. Respite is a short break and allows the caregiver to run errands or just have some down time. It can last from a couple of hours to a couple of days.

Caregiving can be very fulfilling. It can also be very difficult if the person has dementia or other mental health issues, if they have physical limitations, or if they cannot be safely left alone.

It's natural to feel overwhelmed sometimes. According to the CDC, informal caregivers are at risk for depression, anxiety, substance abuse, and physical health problems.
