Resources for People Experiencing Homelessness or Who Are At-Risk for Homelessness in Arizona

Homeless is when a person does not have a safe, stable, and appropriate place to live. It can mean living “on the streets,” sleeping in a vehicle, or staying in an emergency shelter. Being at-risk for homelessness is when someone may become homeless very soon. This can mean couch-surfing with family or friends, staying in a motel, or receiving an eviction notice.

In Arizona, there were more than 37,000 adults and children who experienced homelessness last year. Being homeless and at risk for being homeless can lead to additional problems, including health concerns, risk of being a victim of crime or trauma, inability to find and keep a job, substance use, and mental health issues.
